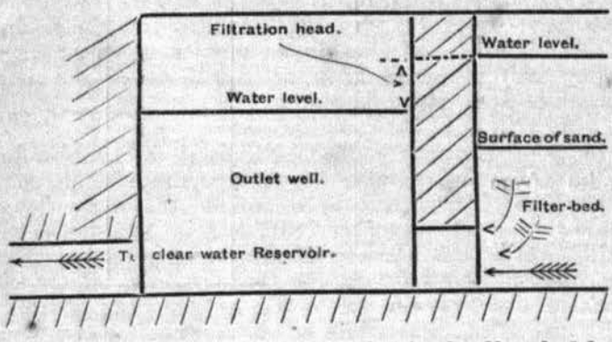
APPENDIX B.

RULES FOR WORKING FILTER-BEDS OF WATER-WORKS IN BENGAL.

(Revised by order of the Sanitary Board, Bengal, 26th May 1896.)

1. The depth of water above the surface of the sand in a filter-bed should never be allowed to exceed two feet; care should be taken to always maintain this depth of water as long as filtration is in progress, and for this purpose gauges should be painted on the side walls of the filter-beds.

2. The water collecting in the drains of a filter-bed is usually discharged into a small masonry well called the outlet-well, from whence it passes through a sluice into the clear-water reservoir; the difference of level between the surface of the water in the filter-bed and that in the outlet-well is called the filtration head; the rough sketch in the margin explains this clearly. The filtration head should not under ordinary circumstances exceed six inches, but in cases of emergency it may be allowed to reach as much as twelve inches. Full reasons for allowing the filtration head to exceed six inches should be recorded in the filter-bed log-book.



3. The interiors of outlet-wells should be painted white, and gauges should be painted on the side walls, so that the filtration head may be accurately recorded.

4. Readings of all gauges should be taken every two hours while the filters are at work, and recorded carefully in the log-book (Sanitary Engineer's Form No. 5) or in any other form approved by the Sanitary Engineer.

5. Filter-beds should not be worked continuously, but the surface of the filtering material should be exposed to the air for at least eight hours out of the twenty-four, so as to enable the air to penetrate and so oxidize any organic matter deposited in the interstices of the filtering material by the unfiltered water. Filter-beds should, preferably, be run dry at night time only.

6. Filter-beds should not be charged from below or by admitting water upwards on to the surface of the sand. When a filter-bed is to be brought into work, the outlet valve should be kept closed until the depth of water on top of the sand remains at the limit prescribed in rule 1, i.e., two feet, care should be taken not to disturb the surface of the sand by admitting water too rapidly at first.

7. Sand that has been scraped from the surfaces of filter-beds should be left exposed to the air for six or seven days before it is washed and replaced in the filter-beds.

8. The fine sand in a filter-bed should never be reduced by scraping to a less depth than 12 inches. When sand washers are available, the fine sand should be brought up to its correct thickness after every third scraping, so that the rate of flow through the filtering material may be kept as uniform as possible.

9. The filtering material and brick drains should be entirely removed from the filter basin once every four years. The pebbles, or broken stone, and the coarse sand may be replaced, provided they have been thoroughly exposed to the air while the brick drains are being laid; they should be spread out in thin layers and turned over with spades at least once a day. The fine sand should be entirely renewed. When a filter-bed has been reconstructed and charged, the filtered water flowing from it should be allowed to run to waste for at least 48 hours.

MUNICIPAL AND LOCAL.

NOTIFICATIONS.

No. 1984L.S.-G.—The 9th April 1904.—It is hereby notified for general information that, in exercise of the power conferred on him by clause (i) of section 138 of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act, III of 1885, the Lieutenant-Governor is pleased to make the following rule in supersession of Rule 9, Part IXA of the rules made under the aforesaid section and published under Government notification dated 1st July 1838. This rule substitutes for the existing District Engineer's Form No. 7 and its second supplement, the form reproduced below and marked "District Engineer's revised Form No. 7," but the existing first supplement remains unchanged :—

Rule 9.—The expenditure on each work will be brought together from the vouchers, &c., passed by the District Engineer and entered in the "Works Abstract" (Revised Form No. 7), which shows the expenditure on the work under different sub-heads. In the case of works costing less than Rs. 2,500, it is not necessary that the expenditure should be shown under so many sub-heads, and half-sheets of revised Form No. 7 may be used. The abstract should be supplemented by an account showing materials at site, which should be kept in the form designated "First supplement to Form No. 7."

L. P. SHIRRES,
Secretary to the Govt. of Bengal.

NOTES.

THIS form of works abstract will be used for works the outlay on which is recorded by sub-heads.

2. The works abstract will be posted day by day from cash-books; stock and adjustment transactions will be added at the end of the month, and the aggregate totals be posted by sub-heads in the register of works. The statement on the reverse of the outer sheet affords a means of tracing the source from which the record of progress is obtained.

3. The particulars of the progress and the quantities of materials received and issued are obtained from a supplement furnished at the close of the month by the officer in charge of the work, the rates and values of the materials entered in this document being filled in the District Engineer's office.

4. Generally speaking, liabilities will be taken to account only in the case of partly paid-certificates, bills, and muster-rolls: whenever sums not actually disbursed are charged against a work, the amounts unpaid must be entered in the deduction columns provided, in order to bring out the net amount paid in the column headed "Total cost." When subsequently paid, these sums must be posted as minus entries in the deduction columns, and as plus entries in the column "Total cost."

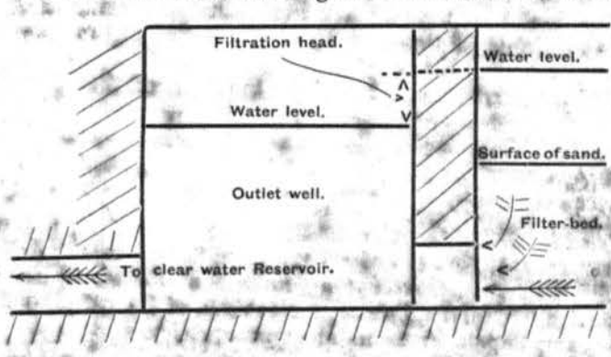
APPENDIX B.

RULES FOR WORKING FILTER-BEDS OF WATER-WORKS IN BENGAL.

(Revised by order of the Sanitary Board, Bengal, 26th May 1896.)

1. The depth of water above the surface of the sand in a filter-bed should never be allowed to exceed two feet; care should be taken to always maintain this depth of water as long as filtration is in progress, and for this purpose gauges should be painted on the side walls of the filter-beds.

2. The water collecting in the drains of a filter-bed is usually discharged into a small masonry well called the outlet-well, from whence it passes through a sluice into the clear-water reservoir; the difference of level between the surface of the water in the filter-bed and that in the outlet-well is called the filtration head; the rough sketch in the margin explains this clearly. The filtration head should not under ordinary circumstances exceed six inches, but in cases of emergency it may be allowed to reach as much as twelve inches. Full reasons for allowing the filtration head to exceed six inches should be recorded in the filter-bed log-book.



3. The interiors of outlet-wells should be painted white, and gauges should be painted on the side walls, so that the filtration head may be accurately recorded.

4. Readings of all gauges should be taken every two hours while the filters are at work, and recorded carefully in the log-book (Sanitary Engineer's Form No. 5) or in any other form approved by the Sanitary Engineer.

5. Filter-beds should not be worked continuously, but the surface of the filtering material should be exposed to the air for at least eight hours out of the twenty-four, so as to enable the air to penetrate and so oxidize any organic matter deposited in the interstices of the filtering material by the unfiltered water. Filter-beds should, preferably, be run dry at night time only.

6. Filter-beds should not be charged from below or by admitting water upwards on to the surface of the sand. When a filter-bed is to be brought into work, the outlet valve should be kept closed until the depth of water on top of the sand remains at the limit prescribed in rule 1, i.e., two feet, care should be taken not to disturb the surface of the sand by admitting water too rapidly at first.

7. Sand that has been scraped from the surfaces of filter-beds should be left exposed to the air for six or seven days before it is washed and replaced in the filter-beds.

8. The fine sand in a filter-bed should never be reduced by scraping to a less depth than 12 inches. When sand washers are available, the fine sand should be brought up to its correct thickness after every third scraping, so that the rate of flow through the filtering material may be kept as uniform as possible.

9. The filtering material and brick drains should be entirely removed from the filter basin once every four years. The pebbles, or broken stone, and the coarse sand may be replaced, provided they have been thoroughly exposed to the air while the brick drains are being laid; they should be spread out in thin layers and turned over with spades at least once a day. The fine sand should be entirely renewed. When a filter-bed has been reconstructed and charged, the filtered water flowing from it should be allowed to run to waste for at least 48 hours.

10. Water should not be allowed to remain in settling tanks longer than is necessary for the deposition of suspended mineral matter, such as clay, sand, etc. Whenever the water of the source of supply is sufficiently clear, it may be pumped direct into the filter-beds, or if the intermittent character of the flow causes damage to the surface of the filtering material, the water may be passed through the settling tanks at a low level without being allowed to stagnate.
